Inmartech e-mail list

- I was not thinking of a web site, but an opt-in listserv, just a mailing list, where scientists and technicians could ask a question to the subscribed group, and anyone with information or interest could answer.
- We have that for our technician group in the US. It's called RVTEC. It is administered by (someone at) UNOLS, and has an email address we post to. To read email, we write the administrator and explain who we are, and we are added. More people can read than write.
- It is not for random conversation (sporadic emails, once or twice per month), sometimes there is a conversation (a question and several answers, sometimes a little discussion) but it is not really a forum (with stupid random comments). We have no flames, and try to be respectful.
- It is not moderated, but it is administered. As I said, someone would need to create the mechanism and add people to the list.
- If there is a complaint, that person is asked to change their behavior and then can be taken off the list. No vendors are allowed on the list.
- It is kind of like a Google Group or Yahoo Group, (or I suppose there are Facebook groups) but it does not involve any of the big social media sites, it is older-school than that. Ascii (probably with attachments).
- I'm not sure whether it is administered via some modern mechanism or some older mechanism.
